

Lynsey and Michael O'Dell live on the Kingsway estate with their daughters Thaya, six and Isla, three.

A close-knit, family-orientated environment makes for a great early education at Kingsway Infant school

Through the generations

Lynsey says: "It's a place where everyone looks out for each other, everyone knows everyone else, and the children have the chance to establish firm friendships from an early age. No-one knows that better than I do as my brothers and I went there, and actually so did my dad! I am still close to friends I made at Kingsway and I would really like that for my children."

Flourishing

Children at Kingsway are given the opportunity to Lynsey is a Primary School teacher herself and as such knows what to look for.

"Thaya is a high-achiever so we were less concerned with checking Ofsted reports than with the overall reputation of the school. We are thrilled with Thaya's progress, and more than happy with her teacher who is caring and loving, but firm at the same time, and to me that is exactly the right recipe. Had Thaya starting slipping behind we might have had our doubts but she is flourishing in every way"
