

Rebecca and her daughters Deborah, seven, Gabriella, five and three-year-old Samantha have recently moved to Watford from North London.

Moving schools can be a risk, but Kingsway Infant School has proved to be a risk well worth taking for Rebecca

A difficult decision

It is always a difficult decision to move a child to another school, especially when they are settled and happy where they are. In Rebecca's case she had no choice as the family had moved to a different area so she felt very fortunate that their new home was close to Kingsway Infant School. "I had heard very good reports about the school and it seemed very friendly when I went to visit. What most concerned me was that my children should be supported academically as they are extremely bright and I didn't want them to be held back."

Approachable

"They are doing really well and the teachers are very approachable so I feel able to talk to them about anything if I need to. I can see that they have a real interest in the children and treat them as individuals... It is a very friendly place and has been brilliant for us."
