

Kirsty wanted to make sure her sons' different needs were met appropriately, and King's Hedges Educational Federation has been able to do that and more

Kirsty and Bryan Cooke live in North Cambridge with their sons Joshua, six and Adam, four.

Good reports

Although King's Hedges Educational Federation is perhaps the furthest primary school away from their home, Kirsty and Bryan were keen to secure a place there for Joshua as it incorporates a Nursery. "We felt that it would be much better for Joshua to start school with friends he had already made through Nursery and I had heard good reports from other people about King's Hedges," says Kirsty.

"treat children as individuals"

"I feel fortunate that we have been able to find somewhere which is prepared to treat children as individuals and recognise their specific needs. King's Hedges has more than answered our boys' needs, and that is well worth the extra few minutes walk in the morning!"
